Specific Speaking Topics

Taking the Long-term View: Linking Purpose & Profit in Investor Communications

There is a shift underway in capital markets around the world with a growing number of institutional investors expecting companies to provide information on their strategies for the long-term. How will the world's largest companies innovate and adapt to disruptive changes in the marketplace? How are they driving sustainable value creation? Sarah shares findings from CECP's Strategic Investor Initiative offering chief executives of the world's largest publicly traded companies an opportunity to share their long-term plans to long-term-oriented investors.

Transparency & Disclosure

Leading practices in corporate reporting are constantly evolving and emerging. Sarah has a unique pulse on what companies are doing well today – and what they'll be doing in the future – after years of observing, working with, and guiding thousands of companies in markets around the world. Sarah pairs the trends with deep technical expertise from her experience as a consultant and practitioner. She knows the ins and outs of standards such as GRI, SASB, Integrated Reporting, SA8000, AA1000, and ISO26000.

Sustainable Development: Concepts & Strategies

The more expectations of business' role in society change, the more they stay the same. In the Sustainable Development Goals, the nations of the world crafted a menu of the world's most pressing challenges and invited business to solve for those needs. Sarah effectively briefs board directors, executives, and practitioners on what they need to know to prime their strategies for sustainable value creation over the long term, in line with their corporate purpose, stakeholders' expectations, and emerging practices.
